OBJECTIVES

- Evaluate the indications for the use of emergency bedside limited ultrasound in the emergency pediatric population in order to incorporate ultrasound in the diagnosis and management of the pediatric patient.
- Discuss the evidence supporting the use of emergency ultrasound in the management of the pediatric patient and evaluate ongoing controversies regarding the use of ultrasound in order to use evidence-based medicine in our approach to patient care.
- Examine whether ultrasound is being used optimally in the current management of the emergency pediatric patient in order to promote its safe and appropriate use.
- Identify gaps in the literature supporting the use of pediatric ultrasound applications in the emergency department in order to promote research on the use of novel and established ultrasound applications to diagnose and manage the pediatric patient in the emergency department.
